OBJECTION SHEET

An objection is a question you haven't answered yet. Agree, ask, answer, close. Log every one you hear — the same five come back again and again.

THEY SAY	WHAT IT USUALLY MEANS	WHAT TO SAY
“It's too expensive.”	They don't see the value yet, or it's the wrong package.	“Compared to what?” … “If it gets you {outcome}, what's that worth to you over a year?” Then offer the smaller package – never a discount on the same one.
“Now's not a good time.”	It's not a priority, or something else is going on.	“What would need to be different for it to be the right time?” … “What does waiting 90 days cost you?”
“Let me think about it.”	There's a question they haven't asked.	“Of course. What specifically do you want to think through? Let's do it now while I'm here.”
“I need to ask my partner.”	Real, or a polite no.	“Makes sense. What do you think they'll say? … What questions will they have? Let's get them on a call together this week.”
“Send me some info.”	A brush-off.	“Happy to. So I send the right thing – what's the one thing you'd want to see in it?” Then book the follow-up on the spot.
“We already have someone.”	Maybe happy, maybe not.	“Good. What would you change about how it's going?” … “Would it be worth seeing what a second option looks like?”
